

OFF THE WALL: BUILDING A POCKET OF RESISTANCE

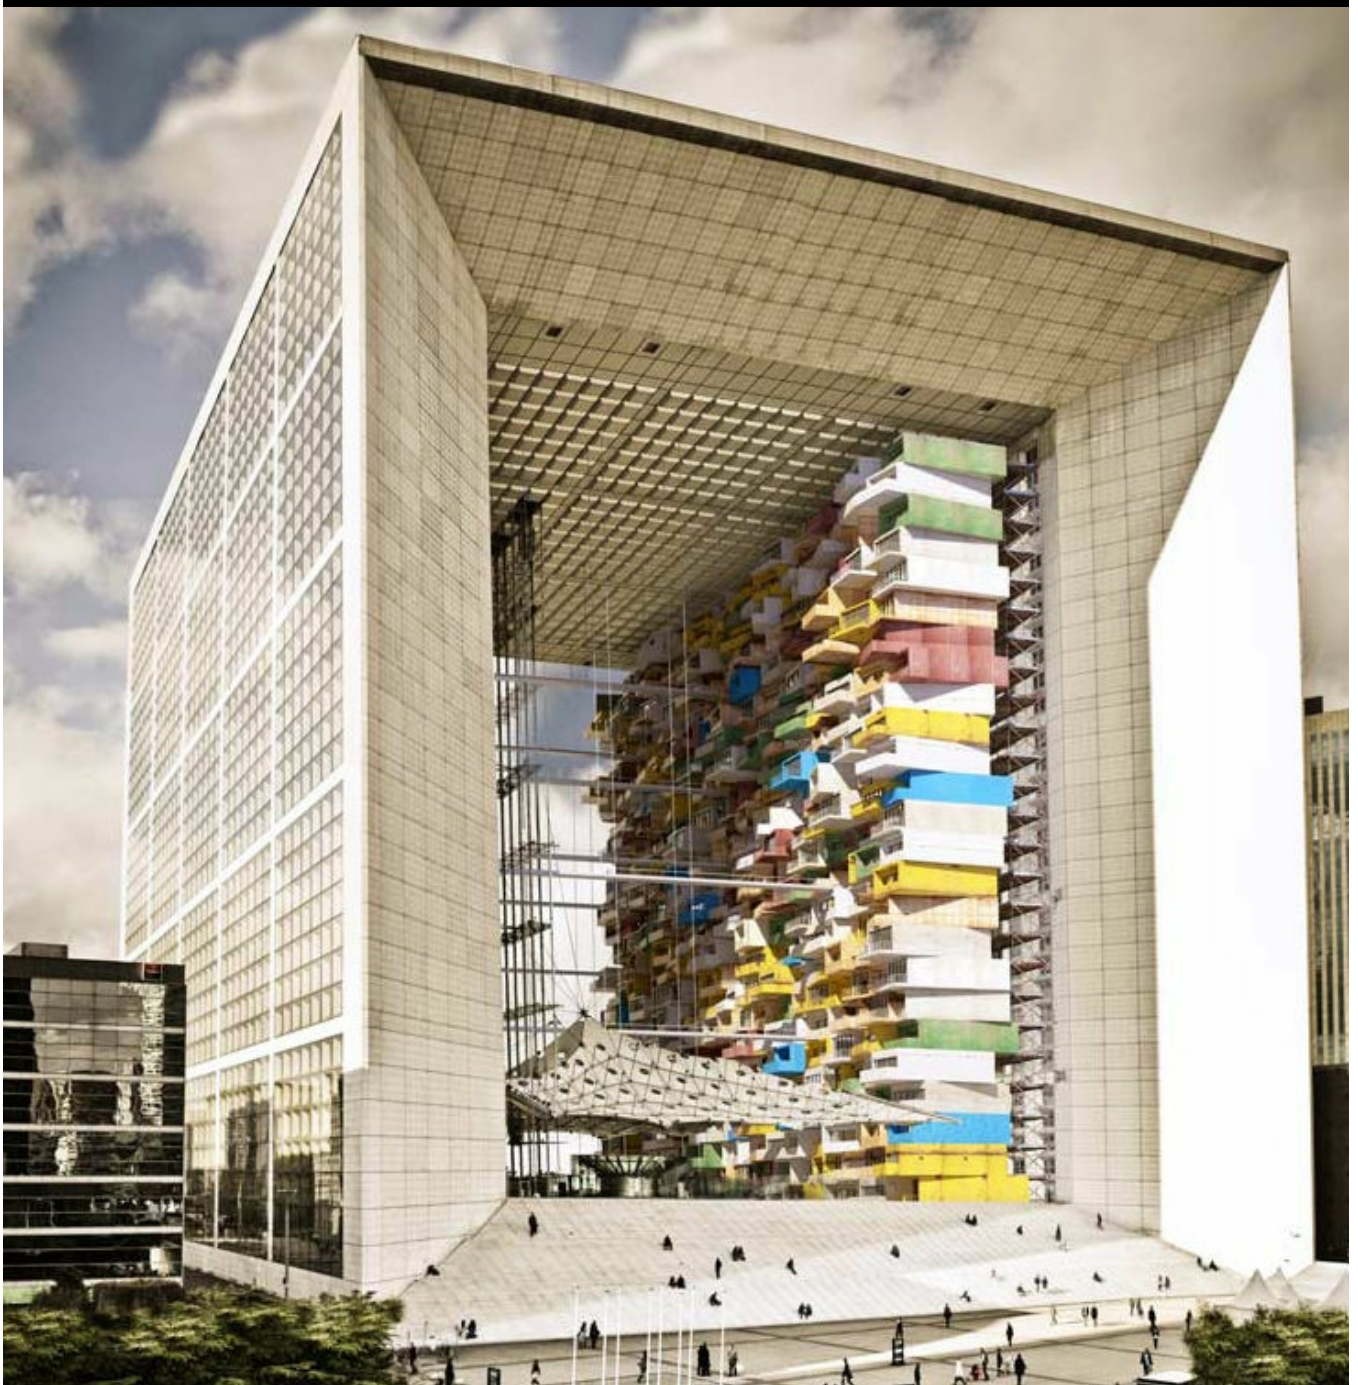

By Jonna Dagliden and Natalie Jones

22 : 07 : 2010    Stephanie Malka : Arche De La Defense : Paris

Paris – French architect Stéphane Malka has transformed the Arche de la Défense in Paris into affordable housing as part of a vision to create a Pocket of Active Resistance.

This act of ‘guerrilla architecture’ sets out to unite the forsaken, the marginalised, refugees, demonstrators, dissenters, hippies and utopians. Inside the ‘hijacked’ building is a modular housing system attached to the interior walls, connected via catwalks and scaffolding.

As LS:N Global explores in our Turbulent Teens trend report there will continue to be a global shift away from rural to urban living. Projects like these may therefore become more common.

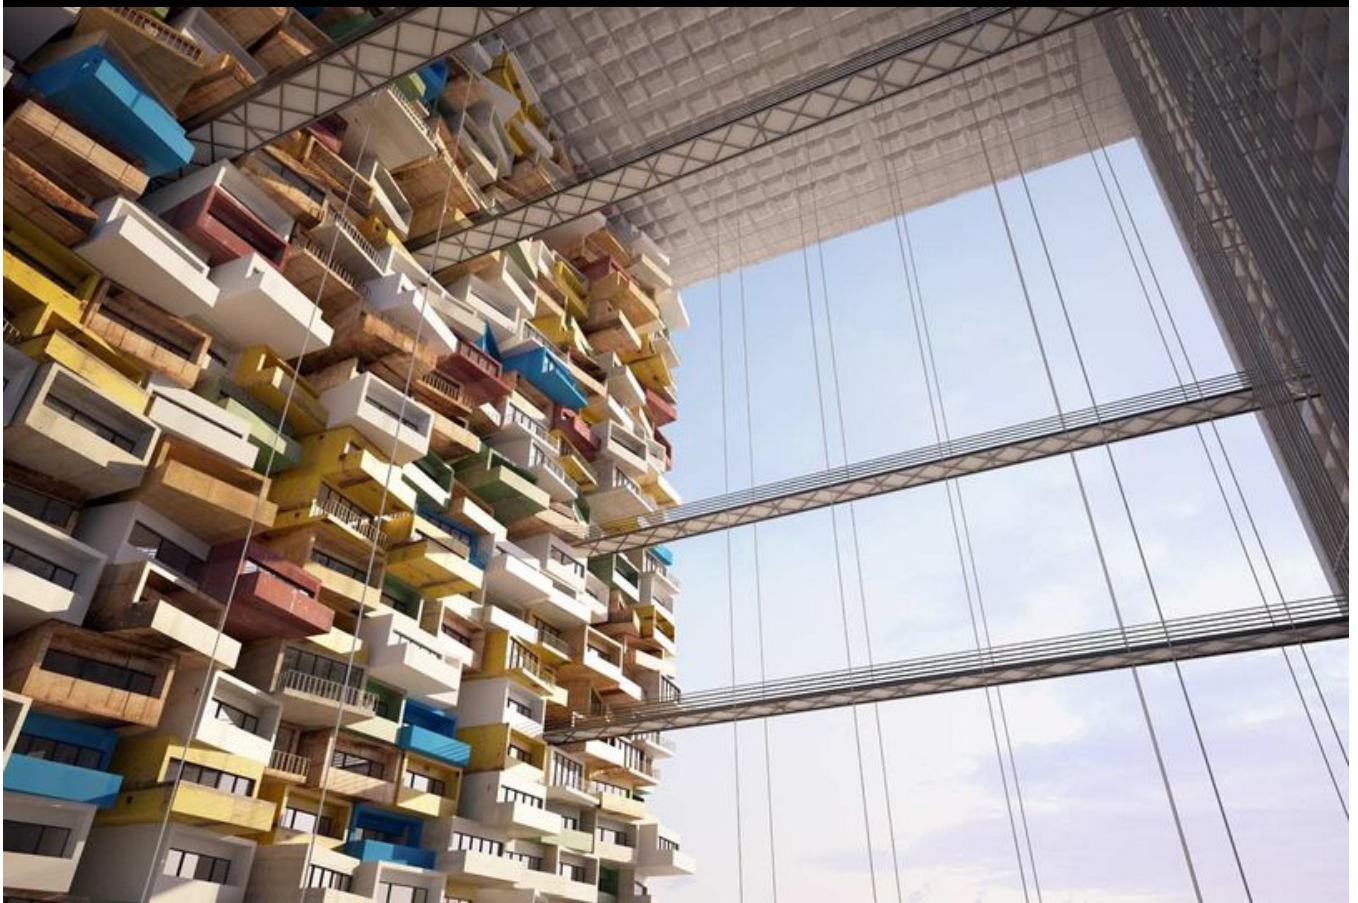

Pocket of Active Resistance by Stephane Malka, Paris

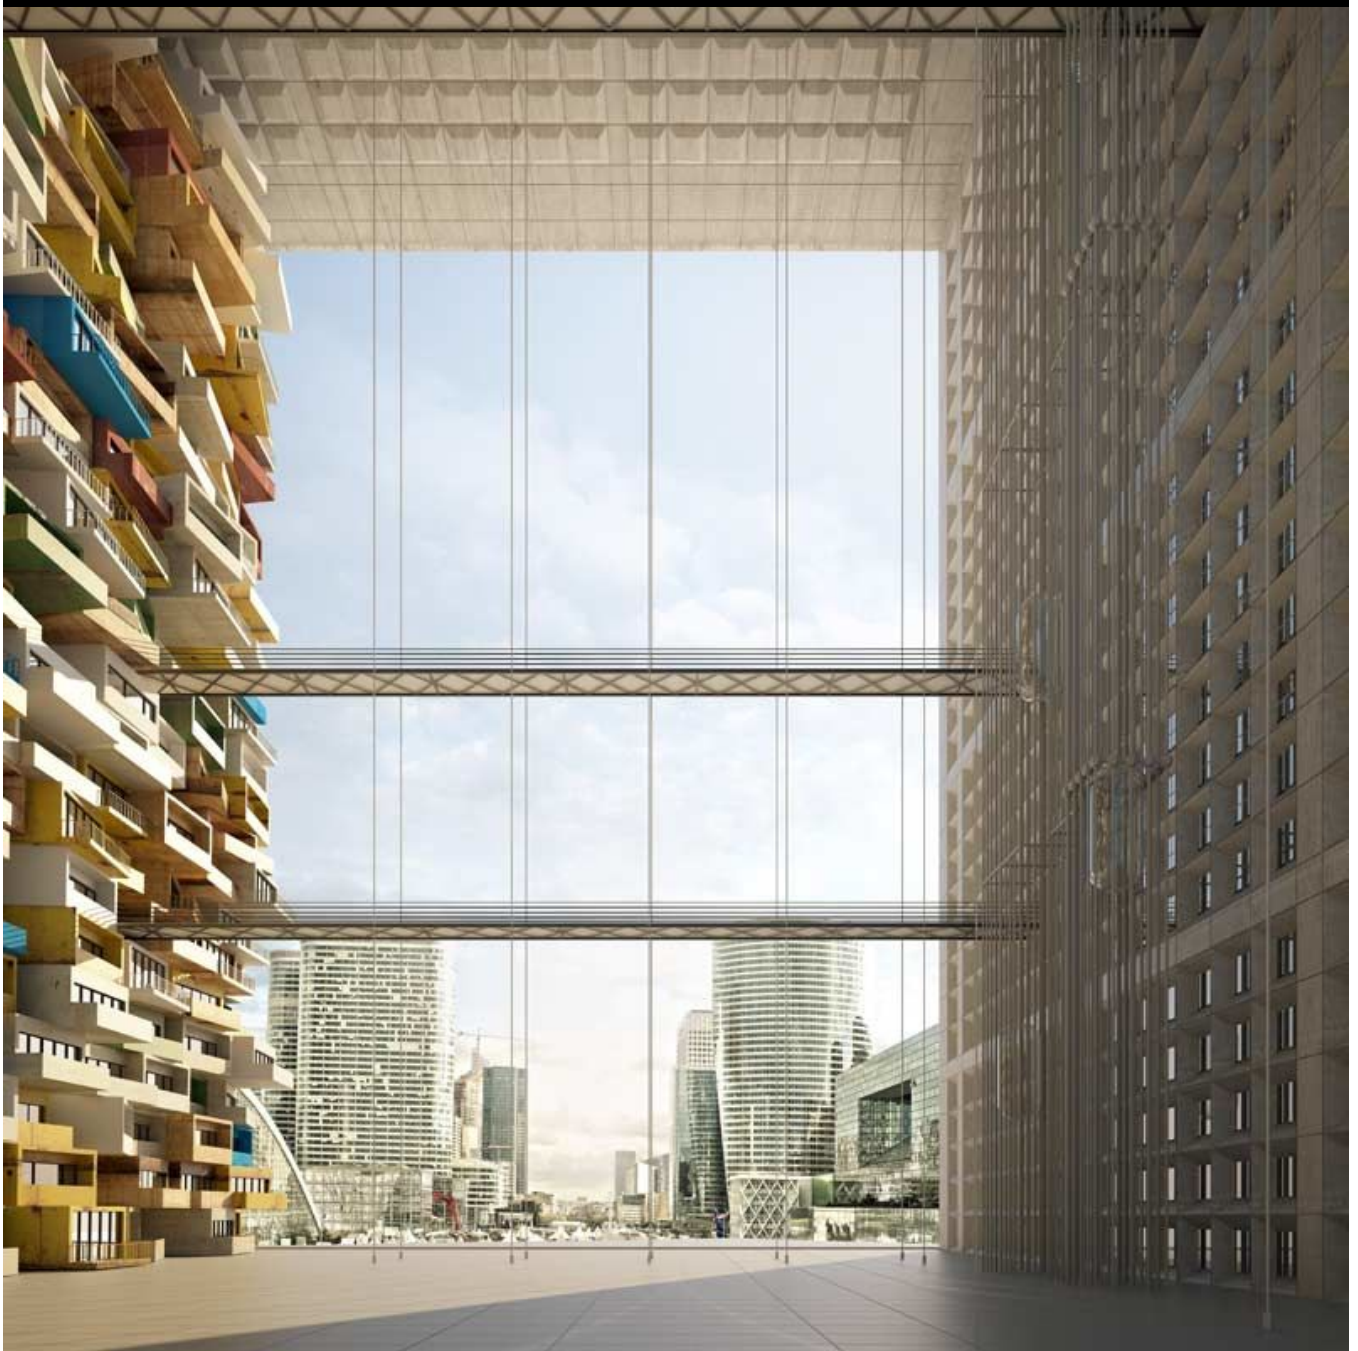

Pocket of Active Resistance by Stephane Malka, Paris

Pocket of Active Resistance by Stephane Malka, Paris

Pocket of Active Resistance by Stephane Malka, Paris