

SPIRITLAND OPENS A RESTAURANT FOR AUDIOPHILES

By Jessica Smith and Alex Hawkins

29 : 01 : 2019 Food : Leisure : Music

Spiritland, London

Spiritland, London

London – Spiritland has expanded its roster of spaces for music lovers with a restaurant that offers diners an acoustic eating experience.

Following the success of Spiritland's café, radio studio and listening lounge in London's King's Cross and a high-end audio shop in Mayfair, its new location brings together food and music at Royal Festival Hall, one of Europe's largest arts centres. The restaurant, which offers an all-day and late-night menu, has been conceived as a dining room of sonic architecture.

Ensuring the quality of sound is as important as the culinary offering, Spiritland Royal Festival Hall is outfitted with a custom sound system featuring vintage Air Partner speakers. Acoustics also inform all aspects of the 1970s-inspired interior, from its velvet curtains and rounded leather booths, to custom ceiling and wall panels. Spiritland's efforts to create 'a temple to music' will be further supported by a programme of talks and guest DJs.

To discover more spaces taking music appreciation to the next level, read our Listening Clubs microtrend.